THE DUDLEY LETTER.

New View of the Dudley Letter Given to the Public.

ne Democrats Believe it was a Successful Trap.

ubt Expressed in the Government's Ability to Prove.

Things Hint at Interesting Developments to Come.

The Case Against Dudley.

WASHINGTON, December 24. Ex Senator McDonald and Congressman Bynum passed the brief that the government have daily in taking a case against Dudley. Henry B Sellers U. S. marshal who may where resignation has not been accepted would be city a few hours to-day. He says he occupies a rather strange position. The president has not accepted his resignation nor has he been officially notified of it. He refuses to accept it, and unless he assumes that Bailey's nomination created a vacancy, why he is still the marshal of Indiana.

Judge J. S. Suite of Frankfort, Ind., a close friend of Sellers and who is familiar with the inside history of Indiana affairs, is quoted as saying in an interview that a reason for Sellers' resignation, which he says he has from Sellers himself, Judge Suite says Mr. Sellers felt unnecessarily regarding the Dudley letter and said he was satisfied that he had fallen into a trap set for him by democrats by Dudley, that the letter was written with a view of having such as many democrats as possible, to better medium of circulation than the democrats could be induced to use. Senator Harrison said that one cent where it would only fall into the hands of the friends, that it was Dudley's intention to call attention from New York by that letter and cause the democrats to concentrate their forces as well as their best men in Indiana thereby enabling the Republicans to carry New York easily. Mr. Harrison said that the letter was in that respect, that no letter was ever sent to or received by any republican committeeman, that he agreed this statement to be a fair one, and that the Senator is the victim of the blunder it made.

[illegible] Chicago Anarchists.

CHICAGO, December 24.—Corporation Counsel Grinnell, Assistant Corporation Counsel Rinaker and Assistant Corporation Counsel Ingham filed today the city's reply to the bill filed by the anarchists in support of an injunction restraining the city from interfering with their meetings. The reply states that the Arbeiter Bund, the society that the injunction suit was brought for, is an unlawful purposes, and that it is composed principally of the destructive elements of society. It further states that the Arbeiter Bund held a meeting in Greif's hall on the evening of November 9. This meeting took place in defiance of the advertised one in Greif's hall, which had been closed by the police. There were police and outside guards for the hall, and it was thought that only the anarchists were admitted. There were about 150 men and 60 women. To themselves they met under the auspices of Reichstags. Vereia Albert. [illegible] addressed the meeting in uncouth and unlawful language. He said that he had failed to accomplish his purpose on November 11, but it would come in existence, and in the end he succeeded in its object—killing the judges, and Inspector Bonfield. On Wednesday the Arbeiter Bund will answer, and on Thursday application for authority to sue for injunction will be argued before Master in Chancery Waller.

The Strike at Delaware.

WILMINGTON, December 24.—The switchmen's strike at the Union Pacific yards has not come to an end. To day Superintendent Choate notified the strikers he would give them until 1 o'clock [illegible] to return to work, and if they did not do so at that hour he would fill their places with other men. Extra crews have been at work, and others will go to work today. The company are to night claiming about half their force and while no trains have been made up they have had considerable difficulty in getting them out on time on account of the interference of some of the strikers.

The Omaha express, which left here at 7 o'clock last night had a number of deputy sheriffs on board who prevented any disturbance occurring in the city. The only disturbance of the train at 36th street and North Platte Street where the train stopped at 12 o'clock crossing two miles from the city was unoccupied by some 1000 strikers and delayed the train half an hour.

Parliament Prorogued.

LONDON, December 24.—Parliament was prorogued today. The queen's speech says: I have great satisfaction in being able to release you from your protracted labors. My relations with all foreign powers continue to be friendly. I regret that the convention, which I have myself and the president of the United States for the adjustment of questions which have arisen in reference to fisheries in North American waters has not commended itself to the judgment of the United States senate, in which, according to the con-

A RIVER HORROR.

A Mississippi River Steamboat Destroyed by Fire.

The Officers Distinguished Themselves with Admirable Courage.

Perhaps Fifty Lives Lost of the Two Hundred Passengers.

[illegible] of T. in Colored People Going Home for the Holidays.

A Steamship Burned.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., December 24. The steamer Kate Adams burned this morning near Commerce, Miss., forty miles south of this city. She was in route to Memphis and had about 200 people aboard. The fire, which caught in the cotton near the forward end of the boiler, was discovered about 8 o'clock. The passengers were at breakfast, and when the alarm was given they all made a rush for the forward deck. At that time the steamer was about 300 yards from the Mississippi side of the river and her bow was at once headed for the shore. The pilot, Joe Burton, was on watch and he remained heroically at his post until she was safely landed. Harry Bost, second clerk, who was seated at the table when the alarm was given, had brought all the ladies and children forward and assisted them ashore. Captain Mark R Cheek, who was on the hurricane deck, remained there directing his commands until the stage plank was safely lowered. The fire by this time spread through the cabin and he was compelled to retreat to the rear and climbed over the railing and descended to the cabin. Here he found Chief Clerk Glanker, who had made an effort to save the money and papers of the steamer, which were in the safe. He seized the money, but nearly lost his life in the burning cabin. He was rescued by Captain Cheek, who also assisted several others in securing life preservers. [illegible] in without being burned, he too jumped into the river and swam ashore. There were about twenty colored cabin passengers who were saved along with the white passengers. On the lower deck, however, a fearful panic seized the crew and deck passengers. Those who were cut off from escape from the bow were compelled to jump overboard to save their lives. The stern of the burning steamer had swung out into the river, and an effort being made to launch the yawl it was capsized by the crowd which rushed at and many of the occupants drowned. They were mostly colored men, but there were three or four women in the crowd.

The burning steamer drifted away after lying at the bank for twenty minutes and floated down the river, her hull sinking at the head of Peters' island four miles below Commerce.

The Kate Adams steamer was owned by the Memphis and Vicksburg Packet company. She was built in 1882 and cost $102,000. She was the finest and fastest steamer of her type on the river and her owners this summer spent $20,000 in repairing her. This would have be[illegible] the completion of her six hundred and second trip in the Memphis and Arkansas City trade.

All the passengers and crew arrived at Memphis this afternoon at 6 o'clock, having taken the Louisville, New Orleans and Texas railroad train at Robinsonville, which station is eight miles distant in the interior from where the disaster occurred. The citizens of Commerce rendered the passengers and crew every assistance in reaching Robinsonville, conveying them there in wagons and every conceivable vehicle that could be secured. There were 187 from the ill fated steamer that came to Memphis. Captain Cheek, defraying the expenses of all those who did not have funds. The passengers and crew lost all their clothing and effects, and some made their escape to the shore from the burning steamer in deshabille, but were provided with clothes by a kind citizen of Commerce.

All speak in highest terms of the coolness and bravery displayed by the officers. The captain, clerks, pilots and engineers all remained at their posts until the last, and it was through their efforts and courage that all the lady passengers were safely taken ashore.

Colonel J. M. Hunter of Louisville, who was a passenger on the ill fated steamer, gives a thrilling account of his experience on board the boat. When the alarm was given he was at breakfast, and hastily repaired to his state room to save his effects. By the time he had secured his valise he found escape by way of the bow cut off by the flames, which spread with lightning like rapidity. He saw at a glance that it was to be death or swim, so he distributed himself and secured a life preserver, jumped overboard and after a struggle in the water for ten minutes he succeeded in reaching the shore. He had nothing but his underclothes on and secured clothes from those on shore. Colonel Hunter says that while he was in the rear of the cabin he saw a colored woman throw her three children into the river and then jump in herself, and all were drowned.

Mrs Harry Fields, one of the lady passengers, said to he an associated press reporter tried to jump ashore from the bow of the steamer but failed and fell to the lower deck. A negro man who was [illegible] behind her followed her example and jumped for her, but failed to reach shore, but fell near her. The negro gathered her in his arms and carried her to the bank and thus saved her from being burned to death as she was unable to move. Mrs Fields says she saw W A Covington, a planter of Rosedale, Miss., perished in the flames.

It is reported that a negro murderer who was being brought back for trial, perished in the flames. The steamer had [illegible] and the officer in charge made his escape, but left the negro in his helpless condition and he was burned to death.

Great excitement prevailed in Memphis when the first news of the disaster was [illegible]

Collision of Passenger Trains.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., December 24. A through passenger train on Nashville and the South on the Louisville and Nashville railroad ran into a Knoxville transfer passenger train at Burnside junction City this morning. Two passengers were killed and eleven injured.

LATER.—Both trains were running in the same direction. The forward train stopped on the further side of a curve. The second train dashed into it at a speed of forty five miles an hour and telescoped two coaches, killing Mrs. Mary Perkins, of Old Dupont, Ky.; Willie Houston, Water Creek, Ky. The wounded, as far as known number thirteen, of whom Engineer McPherson and Fireman King are thought to be fatally.

FINING THE BLAME.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., December 24.—Investigation of the railroad wreck at Bordstown Junction shows that the conductor of the train and the engineer of the disregarded regulations. The conductor of the first train which had been delayed and was running on the following time [illegible] should have sent back a flagman with torpedoes, but failed to do so. The engineer of the following train had instructions to approach the station under full control. His train this morning was going at full speed, 55 miles an hour.

BLOWN TO A SAW MILL.

BOZEMAN, December 24. A terrible explosion occurred at Hastings' saw mill four miles from Gold Hill, on Saturday last, resulting in the instant death of four men and the scalding of another, who will probably recover, although he is badly injured. The mill hands had gone to work early, and being desirous of doing a big day's work they fired up with low water in the boiler in order to get a quick generation of steam. They had secured a pressure of 115 pounds and as the boiler was foaming cold water was pumped in, causing an explosion. Andy McDonald, 28 years old, had his head blown off. His body was found immediately afterwards, but his head was not discovered until yesterday afternoon, when in removing debris it was found lying in the pit under the fly wheel. He came originally from North Carolina. A. Barnard, 24 years old, a single man, was killed instantly and his face badly mutilated by flying fragments. A man named Nedlett, 35 years of age, married, leaves a wife and one child three weeks old, killed instantly. One Niles, formerly from Kansas City, leaves a wife and five children. Mike Barnard was badly scalded but will recover. The force of the explosion was tremendous, and the report was heard for miles around. The boiler was shattered into small fragments and these were scattered over a wide area. The mill and machinery were ruined. Three other men were in the mill at the time, and they, heeding the warning of danger, made their escape in safety, but the others were not able to take advantage of the notice of impending disaster and lost their lives.

A DYNAMITE MAGAZINE EXPLODES.

WHEELING, W. Va., December 24.—This afternoon a dynamite magazine at Mount Pleasant, Ohio, exploded, wrecking the windows and injuring buildings. The shock was felt and the report heard here and all around. It is reported that several persons were killed. Details are meagre and a full report will be impossible before Monday.

There were in the magazine 210 kegs of powder and 10 cases of dynamite. A 14 year old boy, Charles Glick, with two other boys went in smoking. The other boys ran before the explosion. Young Glick was literally blown to atoms. The other boys are badly hurt. Seventeen men are badly injured. Nearly every house within a mile is blown to pieces and farther away seriously injured. Names cannot be obtained to night. One hundred yards away were thirty tons of dynamite in a cave which was not exploded.

WHEELING, W. Va., December 24.—Further advices from Mount Pleasant, Ohio, the scene of yesterday's terrific explosion, report none of the wounded yet dead, though some are in a critical condition. About 1000 pounds of powder exploded. Dynamite in the magazine was frozen hard and did not explode or the whole village would have been destroyed. These explosives were used in blasting a tunnel. About 100 men were working for colored laborers one for Italians and one for the better class of whites. The first two buildings were blown to atoms and the latter partly wrecked. Miraculously the man in the magazine who caused the explosion was the only one killed outright though seven were very seriously and a considerable number slightly hurt. The concussion was tremendous.

Inauguration Arrangements.

WASHINGTON, December 24.—Quarters have been engaged at the Arlington hotel for General Harrison and party to witness the inauguration ceremonies next March. There will be in the party General Harrison and wife, Russell Harrison and wife, J. R. McKee, wife and two children, ex Senator Saunders of Nebraska and wife, the parents of Mrs Russell Harrison, E. W. Halford private secretary and daughter. On the morning of the inauguration they will go to Willard's hotel on Pennsylvania avenue and occupy a parlor on the second floor, where they will view the procession as it forms. In accordance with precedent established by Andrew Jackson and observed by every president, Cleveland will call for President elect Harrison at Willard's and escort him to the capitol.

A Fatal Dispute.

SILVER CITY, N. M., December 24.—As the result of litigation about a ranch near here Saturday A. L. McAfee was shot dead and one man named Hudson mortally wounded, dying Sunday afternoon.

CHRISTMAS TIME.

How the Christmas Festival was Celebrated at the Different Sunday Schools of the City Last Night.

Christmas Trees and Exercises at Several of Them.

Two of the Sunday Schools to Celebrate To-day.

The celebration of the great Christian festival of Christmas by the Sunday schools last evening. All the Sunday schools of the city had arranged to celebrate in some sort or other for the children during the week. Heretofore it has been customary to hold these celebrations on Christmas eve, but this year only a portion of the Sunday schools have done so. They were the Baptist, the congregational, the Methodist Episcopal church south, the Christian and the African Methodist.

BAPTIST SUNDAY SCHOOL.

On Sunday night the children of the Baptist Sunday school held their Christmas festival. The service consisting of choruses, readings, songs and recitation was largely attended and very successful. The children assembled yesterday afternoon to receive their gifts, with which an immense Christmas tree was laden. After a prayer and scripture reading by the pastor, Rev. Richard Montague, and a song by the school, Santa Claus appeared in all his glory and distributed the presents, much to the delight of the young people. No one was forgotten. The superintendent, Judge Colburn, the teachers and Mr. and Mrs. Montague were all remembered. Mr. Montague received a very handsome fur rug and Mrs. Montague a beautiful musical ornament. The decorations of the church are very elaborate.

CONGREGATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL.

The Congregational church was crowded to [illegible] last night by the Sunday school children and their parents and friends, over the occasion of their annual Christmas celebration. The church was neatly decorated, and the exercises were of a very pleasant and interesting character, including the following programme:

[illegible] By the school.
Address by the superintendent, Rev. W. F. Slocum.
Table exercise for the ladies' home missionary society [illegible] By the junior class.
Recitation—"A Church in Heaven" [illegible]
A dialogue [illegible] Rev. L. H. Gerrish
Recitation—"Twinkle, Twinkle, Little Star" [illegible]
By Flora Howe.
Solo—"Christmas Morn" [illegible] By Miss Harris.
Recitation—"A Christmas Story" [illegible]
By Cecil Butterfield.
Tableau—"Sweet is Holiness" [illegible]

After the programme had been carried out, Mr. Gregg presented a handsome copy of "Lucile" to Mrs. Parrish on behalf of the pupils. The gifts for the children were then distributed. In lieu of the presents being hung on a tree they were enclosed in a German "wonder ball," the unravelling of which caused much merriment.

M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH.

At the Methodist Episcopal church south, last night a pretty Christmas tree laden with presents was enjoyed by the children. An interesting programme had been prepared which was conducted by the superintendent, Mr. Gordon Bish, and Miss Effie Peery. Miss Onie Harper conducted the musical exercises. Rev. L. P. Smith, the pastor, delivered a very interesting address to the children at the close. After the programme was completed the presents were distributed. The programme was as follows:

Song
Prayer	By Rev. L. P. Smith
Song
Recitation	By Emma Nicholson
Recitation	By Mattie Parker
Song
Recitation	By Una Robinson
Recitation	Oscar Bish
Recitation	Mattie Nicholson
Song
Recitation	By Mollie Stockdale
Recitation	By L. A. Murray
Recitation	By Mary [illegible]
Song
Address	By the Pastor

CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

At the Christian church there was a perfect jam and at 8 o'clock it was impossible to gain admittance to the building. A very interesting programme had been prepared, which included a Christmas cantata by the children, conducted by Miss Mamie Christopher. Mr Brown a member of the Sunday school, made an excellent Santa Claus. The presents were distributed from a handsome Christmas tree.

A. M. E. CHURCH.

At 10 o'clock last night the members of the African M. E. Sunday school received their presents from a handsome tree. To night they will have some very interesting exercises which will include two dialogues, a number of musical selections, etc.

To day the members of the Sunday school of the United Presbyterian church will enjoy a Christmas dinner at the city hall, and this evening at the First M. E. church there will be a Christmas tree with appropriate exercises.

Mr Frank Harvey has written a powerful melodrama in The World Against Her, which will be produced at the opera house next Thursday evening by the Grover Davies company. The story is [illegible] and is very cleverly constructed, the wrongs and sufferings of a young wife, suspected of infidelity by her husband and cast off, and her subsequent struggles to keep her child from him form the foundation of the plot. The villain who planned the trick, and a couple of good hearted show people of the Cromwell type, who succor "Madge Carlton," are prominent. The situations are well arranged and the climaxes effective.

Work has begun upon the 50 foot addition to the Burton block on the Manitou street.

Mrs. Jackson returned to her home at St. Louis last night on the Rock Island 7.45 train after a visit of a few weeks to her friends in this city.

Mrs. Clemenson who has been visiting her uncle, W. S. Nichols, for the past four weeks returned to her home at Topeka on last evening's Rock Island train.

Quite a consternation was occasioned in H. W. Gibson & Co's dry goods store last night by a quantity of burnings catching fire from the gas chandelier. It was soon extinguished.

Mrs. H. C. Durgin, wife of the popular dancing master, departed on Friday evening's Rock Island sleeper for her home in New Haven, Conn., where she will spend the remainder of the winter.

A horse that was being driven to a breaking cart yesterday ran away on Heerfanc street and dashing into the rock piled near the Burton block threw the driver out onto the stones. He was slightly cut on the head but had a narrow escape from more serious injury.

Yesterday was one of the busiest days Colorado Springs has ever had. All day long the streets were lined with people looking for holiday gifts and the merchants were kept going from early in the morning until late at night. Some of the merchants report the sales rather light although they had to do considerable hard rustling. If Monday is as pleasant a day as yesterday it will no doubt prove as busy. When the purchasers of Christmas [illegible] streets yesterday in the warm sunshine without extra wraps it was hard to believe that people in the cities east were freezing to death within sight of their own homes.

The programme for the Christmas exercises of the various Sunday schools is as follows: Christmas tree on Monday night at the Congregational church at 7 p. m. Monday evening. A Christmas tree, with appropriate exercises, at the Methodist church on Christmas night. At Grace Episcopal church the exercises will be held on the 28th, or "Holy Innocents' Day." There will be a tree and appropriate exercises entitled "Emmanuel." A Christmas tree, with appropriate exercises, at the M. E. Church South on Monday night. The Sunday school of the Christian church will have a Christmas tree on Monday night, with a Christmas cantata, under the direction of Miss Marie Christopher. The United Presbyterians will have a Christmas dinner at the city hall on Christmas day for the children with appropriate exercises. At the Presbyterian church the children will have a good time on Thursday afternoon with a nice lunch but no particular exercises.

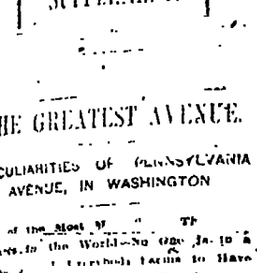
THE GREATEST AVENUE.

PECULIARITIES OF PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE, IN WASHINGTON

[illegible] Dec. 21.—There is no [illegible] in this country like [illegible] It might be called [illegible] with greater propriety, [illegible] the national highway [illegible] It is a noble, historic, in [illegible] street. It has peculiarities es[illegible] which cannot be du[illegible]

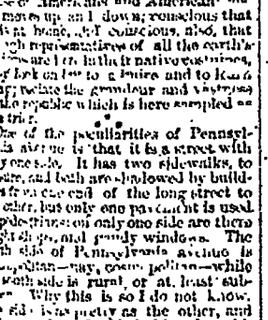


PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE AS SEEN FROM THE TREASURY.

[illegible] elsewhere, because there is [illegible] America, only one United [illegible] capital, and because a [illegible] can have but one such thoroughfare. [illegible] grows every day of [illegible] year, but particularly when congress is in session, the outward show of all the [illegible] world. Here are types of all [illegible] and the blendings thereof [illegible] people, [illegible] state, almost every county, in the [illegible] contributes its quota. If the [illegible] which [illegible] the American not all life have at [illegible] early day in the country's history [illegible] and significance which might be [illegible] to fully typify the American, that [illegible] curiosity is found on Pennsylvania avenue. He is here, and may [illegible] pass me as I write, but I [illegible] to the antipodes—the task [illegible] done out of the throng and [illegible] I am sure, however, he [illegible] more Anglo-Saxon than anything [illegible] a little dark though not [illegible] Yankee in his voice, [illegible] features in [illegible] of his dress, English in his [illegible] far western in his self [illegible] and freedom of speech. The [illegible] American is here, and he [illegible] strongly to Pennsylvania avenue as [illegible] to their mother soil. The avenue [illegible] a show place and clearing [illegible] of Americans and American [illegible] makes up an I dow; conscious that [illegible] home, and conscious, also, that [illegible] representatives of all the earth's [illegible] are here in their native costumes, [illegible] look on to be admire and to learn [illegible] appreciate the grandeur and vastness [illegible] republic which is here sampled as [illegible]

[illegible] of the peculiarities of Pennsylvania avenue is that it is a street with [illegible] side. It has two sidewalks, to [illegible] and both are shadowed by buildings [illegible] the entire length of the long street to [illegible] but only one pavement is used. [illegible] on only one side are there [illegible] and gaudy windows. The [illegible] side of Pennsylvania avenue is [illegible]—gay, cosmopolitan—while [illegible] side is rural, or at least sub[illegible] Why this is so I do not know. [illegible] side is pretty as the other, and [illegible] ugly and old fashioned archi[illegible] Yet, as sometimes happens [illegible] the fairer, for no apparent reason [illegible] blind choice, the north [illegible] is full of life and motion, while [illegible] remains stagnant and dull. [illegible] side are hundreds of handsome [illegible] many large hotels, newspaper offices and theatres. The south [illegible] given up to small hotels [illegible] hardware stores, blacksmith [illegible] saloons in which fashionable [illegible] and often drink. On the north [illegible] thousands of persons daily [illegible] from Capitol to treasury, while old [illegible] as any man was ever known to [illegible] the whole length of the thoroughfare on the south side. The walking is [illegible] on one side as on the other, [illegible] human nature, it appears, always [illegible] the crowd.

[illegible] as it may seem, there is not [illegible] Pennsylvania avenue, from one end [illegible] to the other, [illegible] buildings excepted, a first class modern city business [illegible] A vast majority of the structures [illegible] of all things with gable roofs [illegible] high dormer windows, poked out [illegible] their tops like [illegible] boxes. There [illegible]



PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE FROM THE WAR DEPARTMENT TOWARD [illegible]

[illegible] has modern and metropolitan [illegible] office buildings in all [illegible] everything, of course, those [illegible] government, and everything [illegible] is first class, if not [illegible] The [illegible] building of the first [illegible] a Baltimore newspaper, [illegible] 3d structures along the [illegible] built by the men who [illegible] the Federal City while [illegible] Washington was yet alive. [illegible] December 21.—The night [illegible] of the most [illegible] Bright is unfavorable. It [illegible] that his lungs are in a [illegible] condition and he is becoming weaker.

[illegible] Rome, December 21.—The pope has given $9[illegible] to the Hungarian and $600 [illegible]

[illegible] scores of [illegible] West [illegible] est there [illegible] important [illegible] has many [illegible] called [illegible] floors [illegible]

In many cases not improbable, the owners finding it more profitable to take large rentals from one floor of an old building than to meet a long building [illegible] their chances of finding tenants above the first story. Washington does not believe in going up stairs. The tremendous [illegible] of the modern [illegible] yet rival our capital city. There are not in all the town, again and always excepting what Uncle Sam owns, more than a score of passenger elevators, nearly all of these being in the hotels.

If Pennsylvania avenue has one characteristic more striking than another, it is its leisureliness. Pennsylvania avenue is not in a hurry. Even the typical American here fails to rush. Nobody hustles anybody. Nearly everybody carries a cane. It is all a sauter. Why should anybody be in a hurry? It is Uncle Sam who sets the pace. Uncle Sam doesn't begin work till 9 in the morning. He takes a half an hour for his luncheon. He quits at 4. On holidays and the day before holidays, as well as the day after, and on all days in which prominent public men die, and [illegible] can be found, he doesn't work at all. He simply loafs and saunters up and down the avenue. Uncle Sam sets the pace for the whole town. He makes everybody else lazy. A common complaint made by visitors is that Washington gives them the spring fever, no matter at what season of the year they come here. Pennsylvania avenue, being typical and illustrative, is the laziest thoroughfare in America. The street cars move slowly. Cabs are never in very rough haste. There are no big, bustling trucks as in cities which have manufacturing and wholesale centers, etc. The street looks all the larger for its great width. It is 160 feet wide. Either side of the street car tracks in the middle of the roadway, is a street as wide as the thoroughfares of most cities. A greater portion of the area is here given up to streets than in any other city of the world. More than 40 per cent of Washington is street, and there is room to allow [illegible] boys, who rush along almost as much as in other cities, crying "Stah-yah!" (Star [illegible]) and the [illegible] Pennsylvania avenue would put a Chicago man or New Yorker to sleep. These bevels are the life of the [illegible] They are literally populated by the thousands. In no other city do so many ladies ride bicycles. I mean bicycles, not three-wheelers. The little safety machine, with its two small wheels of equal size, is mounted by hundreds of Washington women. They do not use side saddles. A pretty sight on Pennsylvania avenue is a troop of pretty girls [illegible] along with hair flying. A pretty woman is almost as pretty on a bicycle as on a horse.

The avenue does its work on a rather lively air between 4 and 6 in the afternoon. At 4 the departments turn out 10,000 people. Nearly one-half of these walk in one direction or other on the avenue. You see the old clerks, who have grown gray in government service, trudging along with shoulders stooped from long bending over desks, and the young fellows who wear big canes and gloves and the very latest in neckties, and who smoke cigarettes; old women [illegible] of them, using [illegible] and ball against the onslaughts of time, and many young and [illegible] women who fill the whole thoroughfare with chatter and laughter. About the same hour, too, the fashionable shoppers are out in their carriages, cabinet ladies, senators and members' wives and daughters—and they add to the [illegible] and [illegible] of curiosity to the throng.

All this is on the favored north side of the avenue. Suddenly two flags, one on either side of the Capitol, drop from their staffs. The house and senate have adjourned, and here come another and still more interesting flood of humanity. It is the fashion in Washington to walk, particularly on "the" avenue. It is the place of places to see and be seen. So down from Capitol hill come senators, congressmen, employes, newspaper correspondents, and the ever present women. Washington is a paradise of women—women with nothing to do but look pretty, dress well, go to the Capitol, promenade the avenue and get home to dinner with their husbands, brothers and uncles. There are many young women here because a season at the capital city is highly prized by all the ambitious girls of America. They come with senators, congressmen and all the officials of the government. Many of them find husbands here, and the only reason that all of them do not do so is that there are not enough unmarried men to go around.

But the statesmen are coming along. They are worth looking at. Even the oldest of them—men like Morrill, Dawes, Edmunds, Kelley and Evarts—keep pace with the youngest man who has just come to congress for his first term. They come by twos and threes, senators and members [illegible] Intimately blended, with the omnipresent newspaper correspondent somewhere sandwiched in. They talk politics, legislation, personalities and tell stories. I think the most of them tell stories. Story telling is more than an amusement in Washington; it is an occupation.

[illegible] clerks going one way and statesmen going another, just as surely. The thousand-dollar clerk from the Twelfth New York district or Nineteenth Pennsylvania or Sixth Alabama, is on the lookout for the congressman or senator from his section who, years ago, perhaps, exerted "influence" to get him his place. He wants to keep good terms with his backer. A good deal of the activity of Washington life springs from a desire ever present throughout all the grades of official society to "keep close" to somebody on the high above.

Pennsylvania avenue has a greater number of hotels than any other thoroughfare in this country, Broadway excepted. Probably it has more photograph galleries than Broadway. It is unrivaled in beautiful women and great men.

WALTER WELLMAN

Several years ago a coal mine in Japan took fire and forty or fifty miners were entombed. Recently the mouth of the pit was opened, and on examining the bodies of the victims were discovered. By the action of water they had been converted into stone.

THE FAMOUS TAUCHNITZ EDITIONS.

A Well-Known American Novelist Gives [illegible] Bishop House

[illegible] Sketches. Dresden, [illegible] 1888.

On the Rhine [illegible] along Alpine passes on the great mountain [illegible] and the Mediterranean ships sailing for Japan or the dusky [illegible] on the canals of Holland or Belgium [illegible] shall have to one responsible article, the little space, while Tauchnitz will [illegible] some marks the trail of the intelligent tourist—as the white pebbles kept the children's path in the fairy tales, and puts a girdle to unfold the earth.

Its size, its shape, its paper and its type commend it to one's approval, and after a long and dusty journey, one refitters oneself with the fresh Tauchnitz for the next pilgrimage as instinctively as one seeks water, rest and refreshment. It has, in short, become as indispensable as the travelling bag in which it expires.

In its most superficial sense, it means something pleasant, not too expensive to be thrown away, or lost, or lent—usually synonymous with lost—yet a charming book to keep and bind in half calf for one's library, not too heavy for a weak or weary hand to hold; a solace when the landscape is flat and monotonous, and a refuge upon which one pores with a stern expression when one's neighbor is that thick skinned monster, the inquisitive man on his travels.

But to the initiated the little pamphlet has a deeper significance. It bears a welcome message from one of the most eminent and honorable business firms in the world; a publishing house which for nearly half a century has kept dealings with the leading authors of England and America, and whose business relationships have in many instances ripened into close and enduring friendship.

The Tauchnitz specialty is, as all the world knows, its collection of British authors, but its other ventures are also large and successful. There is a series for the young—well-chosen English and American stories; a student's series; for school, college and home, embracing books by Bulwer Lytton, Carlyle, Dickens, Bret Harte, George Eliot, Macaulay, Scott, Tennyson, Thackeray, and others, ably edited and with foot notes in German; a collection of German authors done into English by such translators as Bayard Taylor, Justin McCarthy, and other masters of both tongues. These series comprise the Tauchnitz English publications, besides which it issues a goodly number of French, Greek, and Latin classics, logarithm text books, legal and theological works, dictionaries, and Bibles. The above list merely conveys an idea of the enterprise and industry of the firm in directions usually unperceived by the traveler. But the scheme of publication of English books in Germany on so large a scale, and for so many prosperous years is emphatically the distinctive and unique feature of the Tauchnitz house.

At the close of this year, the collection will comprise 2700 volumes among which are the works of thirty American authors.

The five hundredth, one-thousandth, and two thousandth volumes, Baron Tauchnitz has designed as memorials, or mile stones, indicating progress of the series. Volume CCCCC is "Five Centuries of English Literature." The preface runs thus.

"News could I have flattered myself that I should be able to achieve such a result when more than eighteen years ago I published my first volume of the series, incited to the undertaking by the high opinion and enthusiastic fondness which I have ever entertained for English literature, a literature, springing from the self same root as the literature of Germany, and cultivated in the belonging by the same Saxon race which is still flourishing on this and on the other side of the Atlantic.

Volume 1000 is the New Testament, of which an English critic says:

Although the product of German enterprise and industry it may be said almost to mark an epoch in the history of the English Bible.

The dedication is worth quoting

I dedicate this Volume to my
English and American Authors,
As a token of Esteem for the Living
And a Tribute of Remembrance to the Dead

Leipzig, January, 1869. TAUCHNITZ.

Volume [illegible] "English Literature in the Reign of Victoria," by Professor Morley.

In the year 1841 when this enterprise was begun there was no recognition on the continent of Europe of the rights of English authors. Neither legal protection nor any private treaty guarded their interests. On the contrary, popular English books were constantly reprinted in Germany and France, without the author's previous knowledge or permission, still less with any compensation to him for the theft. The position of English authors, before the existence of continental copyright laws, was in short identical with the present deplorable condition of American writers abroad and English and foreign writers in America. The mills of the gods grind slowly but the mills of human governments sometimes seem even more tedious and rusty. Let us meekly hope that by the end of the nineteenth century, or at least [illegible] Who steals my purse steals trash [illegible] but [illegible] makes me poor indeed [illegible] Who steals my good name makes me poor indeed [illegible] Who steals my wife makes me a beggar indeed [illegible] author's book may be everywhere regarded as his property, and may even be protected as such, as it were a piece of stolen goods, upon the construction of which he has also expended his time, his thought, his patience, and such talent and skill as he possesses. This, however, may be too optimistic and ideal a view to take of the outlook.

According to the teachings of religion and pure philosophy, we of course own nothing at all. Still, practically, we are apt to claim a few things here below, and hold them fast. The Church of Rome and the Church of England have certain not insignificant possessions, and following such illustrious examples of human inconsistency, we humbly demand what does belong to one, if not [illegible] whether it be written by what one incessingly teaches to be one's self, when in point of fact one is merely the frequently reincarnated soul of some poor penny a liner in Memphis, or the diluted essence of an unfortunate scribbler in ancient Rome—if one may claim anything on earth, if one has any right whatever, why has one not right to and exclusive upon the book which is the voice of one's brain and heart, and the product of countless hours of patient toil?

To day, the poet has not much time to stand aloof from the busy throng and roll his eyes. To day, the blue stocking does not wear cork screw ringlets and unmitigated of the scrowful and spectacles is of life write odes to the moon. He and she are found to day in the thickest of the fight, [illegible] existence—as manfully, it may be, as any [illegible] writer who has bills to write! Who has leisure to study what he well knows is needful to his career? His type exists of course. Let him thank all gods for his exceptional good fortune, and be merciful in his judgment of his harassed brethren. For many well known novelists and poets this day have family cares and business complications; are bankers, editors, clergymen, doctors, or good mothers, good daughters, able housekeepers, are educating and clothing children not always their own, and paying off debts not always of their own making and altogether have well earned by night the rest which they cannot take, because only in the still hours, when the shoemaker may sleep, can they hope to do the work which lies nearest their hearts.

Baron Tauchnitz, even as early as the year 1841 was so enlightened as to regard the creation of a man's brain and hand as his private property and to entertain a certain insurmountable, if eccentric, repugnance of larceny of any description whatever; whether of the fruits of a man's combined experience, observation and culture, crystallized into shape by a goodly amount of honest manual labor or of the stock in trade in an old woman's apple stall. In the year of grace 1888, many English and American publishers seem to argue and act with this same simplicity of sentiment. While others, alas! declare with an Autolycus grin:

"Thine is mine and mine is my own—and catch me if you can!"

In 1843 Baron Tauchnitz went to London to place himself in direct relations with the leading English authors. His own words in the circular which he then addressed to them best indicate his attitude.

"The wish to publish the editions of new English works which I am bringing out in Germany with the authority and sanction of the authors is the reason of my now addressing you. Allow me, however, to remark that I as well as any other publisher in Germany have at present the right to embark in such undertakings without any permission from the authors, and that my opposition arises solely from a wish thereby to make the first step towards a literary relationship between England and Germany, and towards an extension of the right of copyright, and to publish my editions in accordance with these rights.

[illegible] this you will give me your authority for publishing my edition for the continent I do not in any way claim the right of sending my edition to England or to your colonies, and I will not attempt in any way to hinder the sale of the English original editions in Germany. I cannot doubt that you will immediately accept my offer, and I hope that this first attempt to establish a connection with the classical authors of England will lead to a long and advantageous relationship on both sides."

His proposals were very naturally received by the authors in question by the press and the most influential publishing houses with unqualified approval and encouragement. Messrs Longmans then publishing Macaulay's and Hallam's works were strong friends to the undertaking. The Tauchnitz collection was established on this honorable basis.

[illegible] Copyright [illegible] Who steals my purse steals trash [illegible] but [illegible] makes me poor indeed [illegible] Who steals my good name makes me poor indeed [illegible] Who steals my wife makes me a beggar indeed [illegible] author's book may be everywhere regarded as his property, and may even be protected as such, as it were a piece of stolen goods, upon the construction of which he has also expended his time, his thought, his patience, and such talent and skill as he possesses. This, however, may be too optimistic and ideal a view to take of the outlook.

According to the teachings of religion and pure philosophy, we of course own nothing at all. Still, practically, we are apt to claim a few things here below, and hold them fast. The Church of Rome and the Church of England have certain not insignificant possessions, and following such illustrious examples of human inconsistency, we humbly demand what does belong to one, if not [illegible] whether it be written by what one incessingly teaches to be one's self, when in point of fact one is merely the frequently reincarnated soul of some poor penny a liner in Memphis, or the diluted essence of an unfortunate scribbler in ancient Rome—if one may claim anything on earth, if one has any right whatever, why has one not right to and exclusive upon the book which is the voice of one's brain and heart, and the product of countless hours of patient toil?

To day, the poet has not much time to stand aloof from the busy throng and roll his eyes. To day, the blue stocking does not wear cork screw ringlets and unmitigated of the scrowful and spectacles is of life write odes to the moon. He and she are found to day in the thickest of the fight, [illegible] existence—as manfully, it may be, as any [illegible] writer who has bills to write! Who has leisure to study what he well knows is needful to his career? His type exists of course. Let him thank all gods for his exceptional good fortune, and be merciful in his judgment of his harassed brethren. For many well known novelists and poets this day have family cares and business complications; are bankers, editors, clergymen, doctors, or good mothers, good daughters, able housekeepers, are educating and clothing children not always their own, and paying off debts not always of their own making and altogether have well earned by night the rest which they cannot take, because only in the still hours, when the shoemaker may sleep, can they hope to do the work which lies nearest their hearts.

Baron Tauchnitz, even as early as the year 1841 was so enlightened as to regard the creation of a man's brain and hand as his private property and to entertain a certain insurmountable, if eccentric, repugnance of larceny of any description whatever; whether of the fruits of a man's combined experience, observation and culture, crystallized into shape by a goodly amount of honest manual labor or of the stock in trade in an old woman's apple stall. In the year of grace 1888, many English and American publishers seem to argue and act with this same simplicity of sentiment. While others, alas! declare with an Autolycus grin:

"Thine is mine and mine is my own—and catch me if you can!"

In 1843 Baron Tauchnitz went to London to place himself in direct relations with the leading English authors. His own words in the circular which he then addressed to them best indicate his attitude.

"The wish to publish the editions of new English works which I am bringing out in Germany with the authority and sanction of the authors is the reason of my now addressing you. Allow me, however, to remark that I as well as any other publisher in Germany have at present the right to embark in such undertakings without any permission from the authors, and that my opposition arises solely from a wish thereby to make the first step towards a literary relationship between England and Germany, and towards an extension of the right of copyright, and to publish my editions in accordance with these rights.

[illegible] this you will give me your authority for publishing my edition for the continent I do not in any way claim the right of sending my edition to England or to your colonies, and I will not attempt in any way to hinder the sale of the English original editions in Germany. I cannot doubt that you will immediately accept my offer, and I hope that this first attempt to establish a connection with the classical authors of England will lead to a long and advantageous relationship on both sides."

His proposals were very naturally received by the authors in question by the press and the most influential publishing houses with unqualified approval and encouragement. Messrs Longmans then publishing Macaulay's and Hallam's works were strong friends to the undertaking. The Tauchnitz collection was established on this honorable basis.

[illegible] Copyright [illegible] [illegible] Paris [illegible] Napoleon [illegible] trade of unauthorized English books in France. The legal basis was also laid by conventions between Great Britain and other European states. For [illegible] the English author contributes his copyright on the continent, as in England. The Tauchnitz edition is as legitimate as the authorized English edition, but according to the contract may not be introduced into England or the British colonies, and is rigorously excluded by the British custom house except in the case of copies sent direct by Baron Tauchnitz to the author.

It is but just to remark here that probably a publisher is so lavish in the matter of author's copies as Tauchnitz, and so a much thoughtful not only of own books but other people's of fresh and delightful nature and this in profusion and at unexpected moments. Some pleasant correspondence between the Tauchnitz house and its authors abounds in expressions of grateful, and for the most part, surprised acknowledgements of packages of new novels sent to Paris or Rome by way of a little friendly attention. In this correspondence there is also a notable absence of bargaining. The dominant tone is willingness to accept the Tauchnitz terms, in fact willed eagerness to leave the decisive word to him. Again and again in the letters of great and small writers, of rich and poor, of men and women this childlike and Arcadian indifference to mammon is apparent. Now, plainly, most writers are not on Olympian heights as regards money. Some have hard business heads and like a good bargain for its own sake some are forced to sell their wares to the highest bidder. A well known German author is said to have remarked that modern [illegible] drinking blood from the skulls of their victims. To which a publisher retorted that an inspection of his accounts with his authors would very speedily prove whose blood was, in most instances, quaffed. Now publishers—and authors too—are, after all, our fellow creatures, and we ought to be willing to be charitable and admit that they are actually not so black as they are painted and may have redeeming qualities. Still, candidly, the writer usually intends to sell his MS. as high as he can, and the publisher has no intention of losing money on it, and, therefore, there may not always be perfect unanimity of sentiment between these two, or entire satisfaction with the contract. Why then in this correspondence do we find boundless acquiescence in Baron Tauchnitz's unspoken proposals? Why is Anthony Trollope, suddenly unpractical, unbusinesslike, almost visionary? Why has Charles Reade not a word to say for himself? Why does Carlyle lose gently as any sucking dove? Whence this idyllic temper? Is it not because behind all this columbine innocence lurks considerable serpentine wisdom? And does it not suggest that shrewd small boy who, when informed by his mamma that "when he treated an apple with his little brother, it was polite to give little brother the larger half," responded: "Then, mamma, please let little brother divide." Baron Tauchnitz is little brother, and his authors' experience teaches them that they are apt to be treated better than they deserve. This conviction, as becoming as rare among writers—could only be created on the publisher's part by a spirit not only of perfect fairness and courtesy, but by an unusually large and liberal way of estimating the value of literary work. And one word more as to free copies. If a writer tempted of the evil one has ever sold his manuscript outright, and finds himself obliged to buy his own book at the retail price of the American publishers, it may not be faultlessly patriotic, but it is human and pardonable in this anomalous and somewhat exasperating position to feel a large gratitude towards the German publisher who, with what Carlyle calls "munificence of procedure," invariably states, "Any number of your books are at your order."

Doubtless the thirty American writers on the Tauchnitz list [illegible] international copyright is concerned would unanimously assent to the statement that their lacerated feelings have been soothed by substantial evidence of appreciation received from this prominent publisher of a reputed "frugal" nation, who is not legally bound to pay them a penny.

We are a prodigiously progressive race. We are so rapid in our flights that we often leave other lands far behind. Yet let us candidly admit, in some things—some very good things, too—we are slow. We were inhumanly slow in joining the Geneva Cross league. We are unjustly slow in passing copyright laws, which England, France, and Germany, slow as they are, accomplished about forty years ago. Why?

Merry Christmas to all our readers

There will be no GAZETTE to morrow. The printer will have a "Merry Christmas" as well as other people

The Globe Democrat describes a model criminal lawyer whose clients frequently go to the poor house, seldom to the penitentiary and never to the gallows.

Dr. Richardson Smith, the editor in chief of the Encyclopedia Britannica, at a dinner given to all the contributors to that work, said that of the 50,000 sets of the ninth edition sold, 40,000 went to the United States. The 10,000 sets will include the entire sale in England, where no pirated editions were possible. But in addition to the 40,000 sets of the regular editions sold here, there were larger sales of the two pirated editions. This is a striking commentary on the comparative intelligence of the two countries. It does not show we have a higher grade of learning, but it shows that we have five or six times the population that calls for good books. The English scholar who has been taught to look on the average American as a machine for making money will probably change his mind.

LOCATING SUNKEN VESSELS.

How It Is Done in Days of Imperfect Apparatus.

NEW YORK, Dec. 13.—"The steamer Iberia was promptly towed south of Long Island, not far from Fire Island Inlet, lying in seven fathoms of water. A diver [illegible] said that the bigger part of the cargo can be saved. The [illegible] made a contract to that effect." Thus a recent dispatch.

"It blows each day," said one of the officers of a New York wrecking company which has charge of the work mentioned in the above dispatch, "to locate sunken vessels. The old method, which is still described in novels, was to use small boats propelled by oars or sails and fitted with grapnels, grappling irons and divers' hooks. This method was slow, uncertain and costly, only in smooth water.

"The first great improvement was the substitution of the steam tug for other sorts of vessels. A good tug can work in almost any weather, and will cover a hundred times as much territory as the swiftest sailer. The next improvement was the wrecking tug, which is a fast and powerful steam tug, equipped with steam cranes, patent anchors, divers' diving outfits, dynamite cartridges and all the instruments for submarine searching. Among the latter are some remarkably ingenious mechanisms, invented, I believe, by Edison, but improved upon by those at work on the ocean. One of these is similar to the odd electrical contrivance with which the doctors tried to find the bullet in President Garfield's body. It consists essentially in a strong magnet so incased in a frame work that it can only be moved by the near presence of a large mass of iron. Then which it moves it induces a current in a coil of wire which rings a bell.

"The drag containing the magnet and coil is towed behind the wrecking tug, the wire from the tug running to the pilot house. The moment the drag approaches a sunken iron ship the magnet is deflected, the electric bell rings and the pilot stops the boat and anchors. If the sea is very rough he buoys the place and returns when the weather moderates. A diver is sent down to examine the wreck and the thing is done. Large size magnetic needles are sensitive to vast bodies of iron for at least fifty feet, though some electricians claim that the sensibility can be increased to 500. This is all very well theoretically, but won't work in practice. The best plan is to suspend one electrical drag from the stern of the wrecking tug and one each from the ends of two spars fifty feet long placed at right angles to the side of the boat. This makes three drags, sixty feet apart, and allowing forty feet for the sensitiveness of the magnets gives us a path 200 feet wide under the water. If any iron ship lie in that path it is bound to be discovered. The drags should keep clear of the bottom. This is very easily done everywhere along the American coast, as the maps furnished by the government of the coast survey are so thorough in regard to soundings that a good seaman knows the depth at any point within sight of land. This is especially the case in the lower Bay of New York and all along the eastern Long Island and New Jersey shores.

"Another wonderful contrivance is an apparatus for seeing under water. It is based upon the old principle of a long tube with a glass bottom, which is lowered into the water. The improvement consists of a second tube parallel with the first, at the top of which is an electric calcium or magnesium light. For such work as we have in New York bay and the Hudson river, where the water is full of mud and silt in suspension, we can see down twenty feet but in the sound and off the coast we can see from forty to sixty feet. A curious feature of it is that when we use it at night it brings up shoals of fishes around below the two tubes."

AN ANGRY ELEPHANT.

A STORY TOLD BY JAMES INGLIS IN "TENT LIFE IN TIGER LAND"

Breaking a Virgin's Skull on His Knee—Hooked Into a River with Six Men in Hand—Rushing Into the Jungle Sans Ceremonies of Salutation.

"Tent Life in Tiger Land," by the Hon James Inglis, is the best book of hunting adventure we have seen for many a long day. Inglis's entertaining pages [illegible] his readers have Mr Inglis. His [illegible] what he and his friends saw in [illegible] the jungles in groups [illegible] Literature and [illegible] Mr Inglis he has imagined. [illegible] the [illegible] proby but his pages will [illegible] be devoured by boys and [illegible] [illegible] moment by the [illegible] of a larger growth. The story of the hunter intruded on the horns of a buffalo bull and carried off for dead [illegible] time flesh dropped [illegible] the bull's horns [illegible] some horrors ever printed in the English language.

Here is a sample of one of Mr Inglis' stirring descriptions of the escape of one of the author's friends from the attack of a mad elephant.

"Run, run, sahibe the tusker has gone 'mast,' or mad. He has broken loose."

We all started to our feet. George had just gone down to the bank of the river to where the cooking was going on, which lay nearer the mad elephant's picket. By this time the terror-stricken servants were fleeing in all directions. The huge brute, with infinite cunning, had all along been making mighty efforts to wrench up the stake to which he was leashed. This at last he succeeded in doing. With the first desperate bound, or lurch forward, the heavy ankle chains, frayed and worn in one link, had snapped asunder; and with the huge stake trailing behind him he charged down on the camp with a shrill trumpeting scream of maddened excitement and savage fury. The men with the spears waited not for the onset.

THE DESTROYER AT WORK.

One poor fellow, leaning over his pot of rice trying to blow the smoldering embers of his fire into a flame, was tossed by the long flexible trunk of the infuriated brute, and had but time to utter the terrible death scream which had startled us on his head was smashed like an egg shell on the powerful knee of the maddened monster. He next made a rush at the horses, that, excited and frightened by the clamor around them, were straining at their picks, and buried his long blunt tusks in the quivering flanks of one poor jaded horse that had struggled in vain to get free.

All this was the work of a moment. Poor George, who was bending over some stew pan, when he saw his slumbering fellicity of his own condition was not aware of the suddenly altered aspect of affairs till the huge towering bulk of the elephant was almost over him. Another instant and he would have shared the fate of the hapless mahout, had he not, with admirable presence of mind, deliberately dropped his stick, which was quite dexterity and precision, full in the gaping mouth of the furious brute. His [illegible] through the air, as the brute with one swing of its mighty trunk, propelled him on his aerial flight, and he fell some in the middle of the stream, with the spear still tightly clutched in his hand.

Over the river we could see the infernal brute who had thus scattered us in a perfect frenzy of rage, kneeling on the shapeless heap of cloth, furniture, poles and ropes, and digging his tusks with savage fury into the hangings and canvas in the abandonment of mad, uncontrollable rage. We had little doubt but that poor Mac lay crushed to death, smothered beneath the weight of the ponderous animal or mangled out of all likeness to humanity by the terrible tusks that we could see flashing in the clear moonlight. It passed an age, this space of suspense. We held our breaths, and dared not look into each other's face. Everything showed as clear as if it had been day. We saw the elephant tossing the strong canvas canopy about as a dog would worry a door mat. Thrust after thrust was made by the tusks into the folds of cloth. Raising his huge trunk, the brute would scream in the frenzy of his wrath, and at last, after what seemed an age to us, but which in reality was but a few minutes, he staggered to his feet and rushed into the jungle.

IN A VERY TIGHT PLACE.

Just then a smothered groan struck like the peal of joy bells on our anxious ears and a muffled voice from beneath the folds of the shamiana in Mac's well known tones groaned out: "Look alive, you fellows, and get me out of this or I'll be smothered!"

In trying to get out of the way of the first rush of the elephant his foot had caught in one of the tent ropes, and the whole tottering canopy had then come bodily upon him, hurling the camp table and a few cane chairs over him. Fortunately he had kept his wits about him, but not daring to stir, while the savage beast had [illegible] as has been described. His escape had been miraculous. The cloth had several times been pressed so close over his face as nearly to stifle him. The brute in one of its savage, purposeless thrusts had pierced the ground between his arms and his ribs, pinning his Afghan chogas or dressing gown deep into the earth; and he said he felt himself sinking into unconsciousness, what with tension of nerve and brain and suffocation together, when the boats had begin to get up and rushed off.

"How did you feel?" I asked.

"Well, I'm hardly tell you."

"It must have grazed your ribs."

"It did. After that I seemed to turn quite unconcerned. All sorts of funny ideas came trooping across my brain. I couldn't for the life of me help feeling cautiously about for my pipe, which had dropped somewhere near when I tripped on the ropes. I seemed, too, to have a quick review of all the actions I had ever done, and was just dropping off into a dream or unconsciousness, after pulling a desperate race against Oxford with my old crew, when your voices roused me to [illegible]"—Pall Mall Gazette.

Never to Go Again.

A fact in relation to the death of Wa Lingston, not generally known, may be stated. The day after he died the clock in the Masonic Lodge in Alexandria, Va., had been wound up, and it has never been wound since. The clock was stopped and it is never to be permitted to run up to date the hour of his death. [illegible] to stand.

FALCON

Junction of the Rock Island and Fort Worth Railroads!

A Boom that is a Boom.

Hotels, restaurants and private houses besieged and overrun by new comers and investers. 100 men have found steady employment and there is now work for 100 more.

An enormous exchange business between the two railroads, requiring a score of men and acres of side and connection tracks. Every stranger that visits Falcon expresses surprise to find so many substantial improvements, so much business and life, and they become inspired with a feeling of confidence at once and want to own property here while it can be had at the original low prices. Nothing has been misrepresented to them; everything that has been advertised and promised has been fulfilled to the letter.

ONLY THINK OF IT.

Where six weeks ago was but the remnants of an old deserted Sioux camp now there is a $[illegible] Hotel nearly completed, two general stores, one drug store, one meat market, blacksmith shop, weekly newspaper, half dozen restaurants, two large lumber yards, two railroad stations, besides numerous private dwellings.

Still we need a hardware store, a clothing store, shoe store, furniture store, brick yard, grain store, livery stable, and a great many other enterprises that this place will sustain and that will thrive and prosper.

Now is the time to invest in Falcon. Harrison and Morton's election is assured, and that means four years of good times and prosperity for Colorado.

LINCOLN, December 24.—Articles of incorporation of the Nebraska, Dakota, Wyoming and Pacific railroad were filed here, capital ten million. It runs from Omaha to Fort Fetterman, Wyo., with a branch to Dakota.

MINNEAPOLIS, December 24.—Dr. William F. Carver this morning commenced to shoot 10 brick in an hour record. He proposes to put bullets in 60,000 wooden balls in six days, from 10 a. m. till midnight. In the first 50 minutes he shot at 600 balls and raised a total of 25.

A Fatal Accident.

DULUTH, Minn., December 24.—This morning while a gang of men were at work at the Ohio Coal company's dock one of the bins, holding 600 tons of coal, burst and buried John Jackson and John Olsson under the mass. Both were killed.

Collision on Brooklyn Bridge.

NEW YORK, December 24.—A train loaded with passengers on Brooklyn bridge ran into an empty train at the Brooklyn end of the structure about 6 o'clock to night. The front platform of the moving train was smashed. A young [illegible] No one else was reported injured.

Stock Market.

NEW YORK, December 24.—Money on call easy, closing at 1, prime paper 5 to 6½. In stocks there was a steady and healthy rise throughout the entire day. The buying was of the best character, while the feeling was of renewed brilliancy, and improvement as well as business was manifested. Grangers, as usual, were lockers.

Immigration Inquiry.

DETROIT, December 24.—Congressman Ford, chairman of the special committee on immigration and labor, began his investigation this forenoon. The evidence showed that large numbers of Canadians worked in this city during the day or season, retaining their alien character. This amounted in the painter's trade to 40 per cent; in street car men to 25 per cent.

An Office Building Burned.

NASHVILLE, December 24.—Baxter court, the handsomest office building in Nashville, burned to night. Loss $100,000. Judge Mott Allen was at work on the sixth floor when the fire started and managed to fight his way to the second floor through the smoke and flames, which the firemen rescued him. He is seriously burned.

General Harrison's Visitors.

INDIANAPOLIS, December 24.—Notwithstanding general publication, this morning of a notice that General Harrison would not hold a reception during holiday week he had a greater number of visitors to-day than usual. Aside from the large number of callers the general was kept very busy with his mail, which has greatly increased during the past few days.

Jail Breakers Shot.

NEW ORLEANS, December 24.—A Picayune special from Vicksburg says: At 11 o'clock last night City Marshal McMahon shot A. G. Green and Newton Dolan while they were attempting to break in the jail for the purpose of liberating a prisoner named Greene, charged with liquor selling, who was to be tried to-day. They had nearly succeeded in breaking down the door when the marshal fired. Both men are badly wounded.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES.

Wrong Impressions Corrected!

No one should suppose because of the quantities of Indian goods to be seen in our store that such things are plentiful or easily obtained. As a matter of fact they can only be picked up here and there in the Indian country by persistent efforts. While on my recent collecting trip I bought everything I could find in this line that I considered desirable, without any regard to quantity, and I doubt if all other Curiosity Stores in Colorado and New Mexico put together could make up a show equal to one of the same class of goods. What is seen in our store constitutes about three-fourths of the VISIBLE SUPPLY. It may be said in fact that we have a CORNER ON THE MARKET. We do not intend to take a large share of our customers on this account however, but will give them all a chance to come in and COVER THEIR SHORTAGE before the price goes up.

We are having brief history of a sage of our Indian wares printed on slips of paper, and customers who buy such articles for presents will be furnished with as many of the slips as they need for their friends. It will save much writing and the slips may be kept with the articles in the cabinet.

We pack for shipment, without extra charge, any fragile articles sold by us, as we know that inexperienced packing of such goods is apt to result in disaster.

We have a large stock of Gold and Silver Filigree Jewelry this year, made by Mexicans in Santa Fe, and our stock of Native Jewelry and Indian goods is very complete.

We have just had five dozen choice genuine Indian arrow heads mounted as Scarf and Lace Pins, and have had three dozen the Mexican Opals, handsomely mounted in Scarf Pins and Finger Rings, all of which will be on sale this morning.

Some one asked me the other day if I thought my Opals were in New Mexico. Why, we have the best part of a large stock of Opals, more than all the dealers in New Mexico together, and I took Opals enough with me to sell to them at wholesale. We act as agents for the largest Opal dealer of Mexico.

THE WEEK'S FASHIONS.

THE NUMBER OF EUROPEANS WHO MAKE AMERICAN GOWNS.

Whole Cities in Europe Given Up to the Manufacture of Things of Beauty for American Wives—Three of Bonnets and the Newest New York Gowns.

(Special Correspondence.)

NEW YORK, Dec. 20.—Yesterday I sat looking out of my window at the many hued mass of humanity, as the whole female population of New York paraded and promenaded and crowded along, on holiday pressure and large business intent, and I got into a train of thought which led me to review what I knew of the way in which all the beautiful garments and goods of the season are brought here for dissemination throughout the country and

and I don't know but it might please my readers.

In the first place, it must be recorded that there are silk worm farms in many foreign countries, and that many whole cities are given up to the production of silks, satins, velvets and brocades, and others where different wools or cotton goods are produced almost entirely for this market. There are estimated to be about 500,000 persons employed in the preparation of the furs worn by our women, not counting the hunters or sales people, and besides the other things shawls come from Paris and India, jewels from everywhere, and no end of different articles of women's apparel from all the countries on the face of the globe.

How many milliners and dressmakers, shoemakers, and other such workers there are in Europe, the product of whose labor is entirely for the American market, there are no means of finding out, but the figures must mount up into many thousands. The great steamers and sailing ships that come into our ports like winged caravans, all laden with rare and beautiful goods to be employed in dressing our women, and the ingenuity and invention of the producers have been taxed to the utmost to get up some thing new and attractive. The colors are as varied as the rainbows, and the patterns are as beautiful as an artistic eye and technical knowledge can make them. Bonnets are poems and hats whole volumes, generally bearing upon them the lore of natural history. There are curls and gloves, fans and laces, ribbons, garments, everything known in the list of a woman's wants, and that list is usually longer than anybody's purse.

All these goods have to be manufactured in wholesale, shipped to jobbers, merchants here in such quantities that a visit to one of the large importing houses is a revelation. In one there are five floors, each 175 by 70 feet, and all are filled with great cases, shelves and tables, loaded down with rolls of silk, velvet, cloths of all kinds and prices, with cloaks, apparently by the million and stacks of hats from floor to ceiling, and other things in proportion. And there are hundreds of such great importing houses, so many that there is a radius of several blocks in the heart of the business center known as "the dry goods district," which probably represents more solid wealth than any other part of this great city.

Each and all of these import in enormous quantities and sell to the retail jobbers, both here and all over America, and they sell nothing at retail themselves. The number of truckmen alone employed in delivering their goods in cases at the different railway depots would make a good sized army, and it strikes the humble lobbyist as rather curious that while a man is an importer and can handle whatever kind of goods he pleases, he is as apt to have half the great house filled with 10 cent woolen goods and 25 cent calicoes as with magnificent silks and brocades. I am sure every woman will feel surprised at such moral turpitude, just as I did. But then I suppose somebody has to supply cheap goods. We can't all be millionaires, and many are glad to get the cheapest grades—for instance, writers, farmers' wives and ministers' helpmates. I always call a minister's wife a "helpmeet," and her children "stakes." I think it sounds more respectful and consoling.

After the spring, summer or fall or winter importations are here—and they always arrive about five months before the season for which they are intended—they are unpacked and thrown open for inspection, and in a short time all those enormous piles of goods have melted away as the retail stores begin to show them little by little and in small detachments, for if they showed them all at once, the women would soon get tired of them and want something new. Then the leading houses will [illegible] up garments and some patterns [illegible] cloaks or something else will [illegible] and "caught on to" or not. [illegible] pens.

When the new importations reach the retail houses they are quickly disseminated to [illegible] the women, and the left over stock is sold as bargains at whatever it will bring.

Broadway from Tenth street to Twenty-third, and Fourteenth street from Broadway to Sixth avenue, and Sixth avenue from Fourteenth street to Twenty-third street hold the most of the stores of any particular kind, and what is found in the way of personal adornment here cannot be found in the world, for variety, beautiful, costly or otherwise, has an [illegible] among these stores. [illegible] also in proportion. On the [illegible] with [illegible] well as the [illegible] dresses [illegible] well as the [illegible] of the head of the family.

And what are the women's fashions which are coming such a [illegible] Oh, I'm coming to them. Over the train, [illegible] green velvet with [illegible] and moss-colored letters of the alphabet cut out of green colored felt, and dotted all over the crown. This trimmed the bebelot in imitation of those little bits of culinary articles one finds in the soup [illegible] called "noodles." The strips of the felt were gathered [illegible] of bows on the top, interwoven with velvet bows. It looked like half boiled vermicelli. I know the lady who paid twenty-three dollars for it, and I can vouch for her sanity on ordinary subjects.

A very pretty gray velvet bonnet has a band of dark gray embossed velvet down the center of the crown. The trimming is of two pigeons' wings in different shades of gray.

Some of the most expensive though least striking bonnets and turbans are made of Persian brocade. This is usually in dark colors, like green and brown worn in a very close pattern, with here and there a gold thread showing. The material is solid and the bonnets more expensive than becoming.

A few young ladies fasten their feather or fur boas to the back of their hats and let the ends be loosely in front. I have got to learn how they hold their hats on unless, indeed, they nail them fast to their heads. Long veils are tied around the hat in front and brought down at the left side and fastened there in a sailor's half hitch and the ends left loose.

The beautiful Russian blue is seen in velvet in [illegible] and in cloth, and is very becoming. It is often seen in cloth cloaks the long angel sleeves being covered with a rich [illegible] of sable behind [illegible] ing.

Irish poplin is [illegible] the tightest stamps for evening wear, and combined with [illegible] Chance worsted the effect is superb. One very beautiful gown of this material was made this week at a fashionable house of apple green, Irish poplin, with long open sleeves over inner ones. The outer ones were of gold embroidered Italian crape and the inner ones of poplin. The front was of the same, while all the drapery was of the poplin. The effect was very rich and elegant.

Leather bids fair to be used and natural color, stamped in [illegible] figures and flowers. I noted its trimming for many varieties of material in dresses. Belts, collars, cuffs, vests and panels are all to be seen of this new trimming.

Crape lace with embroidery done in metallic thread and with here and there crystal beads, or [illegible] was pearl beads sewed on, is the latest and is pretty as it must be to use in combination with heavier goods for young ladies for evening wear. This is easy to do as the pattern is usually an irregular arrangement of fancy and it is simply worked in chain stitch. The Turks use an enormous quantity of this style of embroidery on their Brussa crape gauze. They work it in real gold thread. However, and this is one of the complicated articles in their marriage contracts, that the bride must furnish the silk enough of gold thread per year, according to his position.

Jet ornamentation is fully as much of a favorite as ever, though spangles broaden and metallic beads are here their place also. And there are beautiful detached bits of beading and beaded drops that are perfectly exquisite.

Dressers for the opera are merely hidden from view in big theatre bag wraps, redingotes and raglans. The jackets are very short and the wraps very long. There are no half long garments worn this season. I saw a lady go to a box with a gray cloth cloak of green and blue plaid, with a green silk hood. The plaid was over a foot square. Some of the [illegible] and from [illegible] and ten inches long and those on the [illegible] velvet all sorts of [illegible]

CEREALINE DUST.

It Scares Cranes Full of Holes That Are Most Disastrous.

(Special Correspondence.)

NEW YORK, Dec. 17.—The so-called attempt to dynamite the Schaffer distillery in Chicago turns out to have been the explosion of corn dust floating in the air. Cerealine is a vegetable food made from corn and is largely used in breweries and distilleries instead of malt. A little later a similar explosion occurred in Oliver's cereal mill in the same city, the material causing the trouble being fine oatmeal dust. The explosions belong to a rare class to which scientists have only of late turned their attention.

Professor Barker in Germany, Dr. Chandler and Professor Rood in this country have studied the subject with considerable care. From their studies as well as from chemistry experiments and observations made since they announced their work, it is known that any vegetable matter which can be burned becomes an explosive when converted into dust and mixed with a large bulk of air. Ordinary white flour is a good example. This is in small quantities upon a coal or wood fire at home, but with great difficulty; if thrown in large quantity it burns quickly enough to be fatal. Yet it has been done by King; two ounces of it were shaken in a clean barrel to form a dusty cloud to be ignited, they said it blew with such violence as to blow out the heads.

It was from this possibility that the great mill explosion in Minneapolis occurred some years ago. In a building of roomy dimensions, owing, it may be, to large range of the factor in question [illegible] probably a match struck by one of the victims was what fanned the mixture of air and flour. No [illegible] the next moment a giant explosion occurred, blowing the walls out and leaving the building a mass of ruins.

Of similar character was a series in Glasgow in a candle factory in New York city. In this factory the building, raw material was the finest powdered sugar. It was used in such large quantities as to make an appreciable dust everywhere. When the heavy machinery was in motion the jarring and shaking stirred up the sugar dust and filled the air with it. The mixture of sugar dust and air took fire from a burning gas jet used to illuminate a dark rear room and blew out the front of the building.

In discussing the subject, Dr. Francis Wyatt, chemist of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, says: "Explosions are simply combustion. Anything that can be burned can be exploded to the air. A shredding piece of wood, if left alone, gives out its dissipated into a jar of oxygen, burns quite fiercely in a gas deep magnesia under a small combustible. If placed into a current of [illegible] gas, burns with a flash in smelling, that of gunpowder. A letter [illegible] in a pitch, [illegible] burn. If it be shaded [illegible] building fuming, it produces [illegible] smoke and [illegible] suffocates the [illegible]. If, [illegible] any contrivance be [illegible] which will force air through it, coal and sawdust, the latter burns as well as the former. Finally, if the sawdust be so fine that when agitated it will rise and float some time in the air, it will explode with a [illegible]."

In the Catskills and other parts of New York state there is an industry consisting in converting beech trees into wood flour. A whole truck is stripped of its bark, put into a large mechanism which is practically a pestle in a mortar, [illegible] and cut into [illegible] of the finest [illegible]. These are then taken to a mill and converted into wood meal or wood flour. This is used, I believe, for wrapping paper, although the fact is that it is [illegible] with [illegible] and [illegible] fed the Indians. I simply cite this with daily bread. In very dry summer weather this dust [illegible] the air and [illegible] explosive. Too [illegible] have been accidents of the kind in this industry.

Dr. Brining, the distinguished physician and scientist, of Allentown, Pa., called attention to the danger in malt which were devoted to the dry grinding of colors when the latter were of vegetable character, and showed that the dust of lampblack, carmine and gamboge [illegible] and when floating in or mixed with a respirable amount of air. Dr. Charles Pelz, the New York pharmacist, has pointed out the same danger in those places where roots, herbs, barks and other vegetable drugs are ground. In the case of such chronic substances as licorice root and [illegible] the risk is greater, as the dust from grinding is finer and lighter, and remains suspended in the atmosphere longer than the dust of coal and [illegible].

John B. King, an expert on explosives, tried a series of experiments with combustible dusts, using a stout, strong barrel, one of which [illegible] fitted but loosely. A certain small amount of dust was put in the barrel, violently shaken until it was all stirred up, and then ignited. He found that flour, starch, corn starch, rice flour, rice [illegible] powder [illegible] and [illegible] dust, when [illegible] of air which weighed [illegible] times as much as the dust. He claims that the only safe rule for milling is [illegible] and [illegible] dust, and that any kind is safer to incase the working parts in a [illegible] and hoisting in first [illegible] and have a strong current of air [illegible] and passing out through the [illegible].
